HUGH M'NEIL'S HEN.

By ALFRED R. CALHOUN.

squah. He's got hit into his head that everythin he ken tote off without bein cotch is his'n. Then he's got a lot moah of the olo stay at-homes into the same way of thinkin, and them uns is even a-teachin pore Hen ez wouldn't commit a sin ef so be he was to do a murdah to steal."

I thought of my glasses as she said this, and was about to tell her of them, when without any knock a lank man clad in butternut and with his trousers inside a pair of wrinkled rusty boots, came in with the inevitable squirrel rifle in his lean, cinnamon colored hands. The man's thin beard and long hair were a rusty black, and there was a certain sneaking expression in the face that was not at all prepossessing. Giving me a nod, the man said:

"Evenin, Min. Howdee?"

"Howdee, Peet?" she responded.

"Hugh home?"

"No."

"Back soon?"

"Reckon so."

"You uns peah fo to have company."

"Yaas, Peet; strangers a-restin and patterin their critters."

"Sojers." This was addressed to me by the man Peet.

"Yes, my friend, trying to be," I replied with affected heartiness.

"Hit's a doggone hard life."

"So it is, sir, and I hope it will soon be over."

"Thar's some ez thinks hit won't eveh stop, but ef all had a keerd as little fo fightin ez me, hit wouldn't a nevah begun." Then with a change of manner and addressing me: "Come from up Chattanooga way?"

"Yes."

"Bound fo Bridgeport, I reckon?"

"No, Stevenson."

Not caring to talk with this man, for I could see he was trying to act, I went down to the creek where the horses were grazing and the men were sitting in a group with their carbines in their laps. I had just explained to them that after we had had something to eat we should push on and try to get some sleep in the hills after midnight, when Hugh McNeil came to say that he had procured bacon and corn from a neighbor and that Min was cooking the forter.

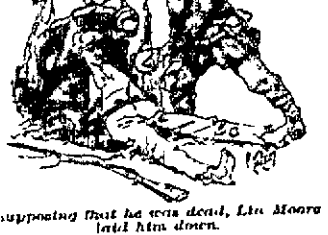
The corn he brought down at once was enough to give the horses a good feed and to leave a few quarts spare over, which I proposed to carry away. We went up to the house one-half at a time, I going with the second lot, and ate heartily of bacon and corn bread, which we might have washed down with unlimited new whisky if we had felt so disposed.

I noticed while eating that in addition to Peet two more mountain men who looked very much like him came and looked in from the door, but refused Hugh McNeil's invitation to eat.

McNeil prevailed on me, and I led him to believe that I would remain till the next morning, but I had made up my mind to start as soon as the moon was up and not to say goodby to him. The men were quietly saddling up a few hours after supper when Min found me out, and drawing me into the shadows whispered:

"Dad's got the gang heah, and they're dead sot fo' you uns."

CHAPTER III.



Supposing that he was dead, Lin Moore laid him down.

My six companions, who had been feeling a bit nervous, overheard the girl Min McNeil. As soon as she had gasped out her warning, the men stood to horse expecting to hear the order to mount. Hugh McNeil was evidently the leader of the men now in or coming to his cabin, and it was to me very certain that to attempt to avoid trouble by a flight through the wooded hills in the night, leaving these guerrillas free in the rear, would be to give them the advantage. McNeil knew every trail and he and his men could travel faster on foot than we could on horseback. Once in our front these fellows would bushwhack us, nor give us any chance to resist.

Min having put us on our guard was about to flee back to the cabin, when I restrained her long enough to whisper:

"Don't blame me if I carry off your father tonight."

"Tote him es fur ez you uns please, and ef you uns tote him so fur he can't never come back to that cabin up thar hit won't make me cry no teahs."

There was a sob in the girl's voice as she pressed my hand and disappeared in the darkness. It did not take me a half minute to outline my plans to the men and to impress them with the importance of taking the papers from my breast pocket in the event of my being killed or even severely wounded, and getting them through to Mitchell Sill or Negley.

Hitching the horses back from the stream and leaving two men to guard them, with orders to permit no one to approach till we returned, I took the remaining four men and went quietly up the slope to the cabin. Loud laughter and the boisterous voices of many men talking at once convinced me while we were yet fifty yards away that Hugh McNeil had received re-enforcements. At this distance we halted, and I sent one of my men to the cabin to tell Hugh McNeil that I wanted to see him for a few minutes.

Against the shaft of light from the cabin door we could see our comrade and the burly form of McNeil approaching. The mountaineer expected to find me down at the creek, but I well knew that to surprise such a man was to make him physically powerless and mentally incompetent for the time.

"Hugh McNeil, you are my prisoner! If you utter a whisper or move an inch without my order you are a dead man!"

The four cocked carbines pressed against his body convinced him that he must obey. As I took off his hat and tied his hands behind him with a picket rope brought up for the purpose, I could hear the quick, heavy breathing, and the gritting of the teeth that told the effort with which the fellow was restraining himself. It required another threat, after he had been bound, to make him lie down, but he quickly realized that we were in a hurry and meant business. One of the men was detailed to watch McNeil, which left only four, including myself, to deal with the gang in the cabin, but the advantage was on our side.

Audacity and judicious surprise are the strongest allies of the trooper. There were eight men smoking inside the cabin, all lank desperate looking fellows, with powder horns and bullet pouches slung from their shoulders or waist belts, and their heavy hunting rifles within reach.

"Shoot the first man who lifts a hand!"

The men in the cabin heard this, and they turned to the door to see three troopers covering them with their carbines.

"What in h—l does you uns mean?" asked the man Peet, whom I have mentioned before.

"It means that you fellows are prisoners! Don't move!"

The mountaineers were thoroughly frightened and the bravest offered no resistance while their rifles were being carried out and they were being divested of their ammunition, belts, pistols and knives.

In the darkest corner of the cabin I could see Min McNeil, her fine eyes aglow and her breast heaving with excitement. I called to her to leave the place and she instantly obeyed. Then I told the mountaineers that I would station my men about the cabin and that the first one of them that attempted to leave till I had a talk with them again in the morning must take the consequences.

My men were moved back, and we made a bonfire of the woodpile which was found about fifty feet in front of the cabin door. Into this fire was built the arms, ammunition and belts we had taken from the mountaineers, the object being to destroy the stuff, which was of no use to us, and at the same time to keep up the impression of our presence on the prisoners till daylight.

As we were hurrying back to where we left Hugh McNeil the girl stopped me, and drawing me aside asked: "Is you uns gwine to kill dad?"

"No," I replied, "but we'll carry him with us. I may release him after the danger is over."

"Don't kill him, fo even though I hain't got no heart fo him, he's my dad," she said with a sob.

I assured her that I had no such purpose, but at the same time tried to impress her with the fact that a human life, particularly that of an enemy, was of no account compared with the success of our enterprise.

"If so be," she continued, "you uns could kinder tote him off till the wah's ovah, and Lin Moore kin come back to keer fo me and Hen, ez he'll be mighty glad to do, hit'd be a kindness to we uns. I kin make out all alone by myself of he's kep a kinder prezner with no chance to drink whisky."

"All right, Min," I replied, and I pressed into her hand what was left of the Confederate money we had brought along. I was about to move off when, to my surprise, she threw her arms about my neck and kissed me. Poor girl! as I felt her hot tears on my face I think I understood and honored the emotion that prompted the act. We had made a break in the crushing loneliness and awful monotony of her life, and we were a living link connecting her with Lin Moore, the gallant fellow in whom all the hopes of her solitary life centered. She confirmed this sudden impression by whispering:

"Tell Lin I don't do nawthing sleepin nor wakin but jist a-thinkin of him an' a-prayin fer the wah to end that he may come back and take me to live up Bridgeport way."

I promised to do this, and with a heart full of gratitude for the brave girl we bade her goodby.

"Whar in h—l is you uns gwine to tote me?" was Hugh McNeil's salutation when I made him rise and walk down to where the horses were waiting.

"That depends on how you behave," I said.

He made no response, but indicated his feelings by muttering strings of oaths and assuring us that we should all be "cotched and hanged" before we got out of the hills. He was forced to mount the spare horse, but that he might be able the better to retain his seat his hands were fastened in front so that he could rest them on the pommel, but the bridle rein was in the hands of a man who rode by his side.

That our work was quick can be inferred from the fact that we were mounted and moving out of the valley before the powder flasks and arms, left in the fire before the cabin, began to explode, and then it sounded for some seconds as if a fight were going on up the hill, and the flaming brands hurled into the sky helped to increase the impression.

The moon rose about nine o'clock, but as it was cloudy and threatening rain I was forced every ten minutes to strike a light in the dark woods through which we were traveling entirely by compass. Two hours after leaving McNeil's cabin it was decided to halt for the night, that the men and horses might be fresh for the rapid march which it was hoped would take us to our friends on the morrow. Our little band was divided into three reliefs. The horses were picketed and unsaddled, and the prisoner was made as comfortable as was consistent with his safety.

Toward morning it began to rain, and when daylight came a dense mist made it impossible to see a hundred yards ahead. We ate of the corn bread and bacon procured from our prisoner the night before, giving him his share, though by no means as much as he wanted. When we were again ready to move forward McNeil beckoned me to him, for I had forbidden loud talking, and asked:

"Do you uns know whar this place is?" and he made a sweep about his head with his bound arms.

"Very well," I replied.

"Whar?" and he stuck out his chin and glared at me as if he were gloating over my ignorance.

"We propose to get through all right, Hugh," I said.

"But what ef so be you uns should run into a right smart bunch of grays, eh?"

"In that event, Hugh, the first shot fired will be in your brain."

"Do you uns mean that fo dead earnest?"

"We do."

"Well, may I be d—d." He shook his shaggy head and a look of actual horror took the place of the fierce glitter in his bluish gray eyes. "Ef so be I'm gwine to be shot ez soon ez you run into the enemy, and you uns look ez of you uns meant hit, I reckon hit'd be more like fah play to give me a chance to get this crowd on the right track."

"Go on; I will listen to you," I said.

"Now, is you uns gwine down Stevenson way?"

"We will go in that direction."

"Which way from har?"

I showed him my pocket compass. It was evidently the first he had ever seen, but like all ignorant men he had a contempt for scientific appliances and methods.

"If you uns trust to that cussed little wobblin thing," he said, "hit'll git yo' home bout's well as a bline man on crutches. I've heern of them things, but I've never 'lowed thar was anything in em, and now that I sees one I'm dead shuah they ain't worth a d—n. Now you uns is fo' makin southwest. Waal, that means Confeds. Off har," and he motioned to the northwest, "is the way I'd go ef so be I was a Yank and found myself lost in the woods. Now I'm a-tellin you uns all this, not coz I want to help, but coz I don't want to be kilt."

This was good reasoning, and I should have followed the advice had I not known that it would take me away from the place where I expected to find the rest of the men under Brown and Arthur. As a compromise I took a course between the two and pushed ahead. About a mile from our camping place we came upon a trail that led due west, and this it was decided to follow so long as it did not deviate from the course set down.

About the middle of the forenoon, when we were pressing through a particularly dense stretch of woods and undergrowth, the prisoner sat very erect and looked eagerly about him. I could see he was very much excited, and I reasoned that this must be due to something he heard or saw. I at once called a halt, and imitating me the men bent forward in their saddles to listen.

Here again I heard the call of the whippoorwill that had so puzzled me when we were near Chattanooga two nights before. Soon the whippoorwill call was changed to that of a cry of alarm between a shrill shout and a hoarse whistle such as I had never heard before. I knew the source of this noise, but made no comment while I listened and watched McNeil's face. I could see that he was unconsciously tugging at the rope that held his wrists, and it was the same involuntary impulse that led him to respond, as Lin Moore had done on our first meeting with the idiot, by imitating the "bob white" call of the quail.

We were now quite prepared for the coming of Hugh McNeil's Hen. He had evidently found us without following a trail, for he burst into our midst from the thick undergrowth to the right, and at once ran up to his father and began stroking his knees beside the horse just as I have seen a dog manifest affection. He must have expected some return of this demonstration, but as it was not made he looked up and saw that his father's hands were bound before him.

A few seconds of dumb, unutterable surprise, the idiot looked wonderingly about him and the resemblance between him and the prisoner was for the moment startling. Suddenly he found tongue and began to howl and bark like a dog, and to run from one to the other, as if to inquire the reason for his father's condition or to ask for his release.

"You must make that boy stop his noise," I said to McNeil.

The idiot must have understood me, for he suddenly stopped, laid his battered musket on the ground, took off the old knapsack, and to my great comfort brought to view the field glasses he had stolen from me. He pushed them into my hand and then began gesticulating and calling out: "Dad, no rope! We uns go home! Bow, wow, wow—br-r-r-r!"

I had made a failure of my previous effort to communicate with Hugh McNeil's Hen, so I told the prisoner to explain to him that I must keep him (Hugh) bound till we reached the Union lines.

"Come har, Hen." The idiot obeyed. "Now keep yo' d—n mouth shet or I'll gad yo'."

The poor creature was evidently accustomed to this kind of talk and to rougher treatment, for he crouched down and covering his face with his hands he looked up at his father between his fingers.

"Tell him he must go home; we can't take him along," I said.

"Thar wouldn't be no use in that. Hen he don't know nawthin 'bout home, and he lives bein a natral, purty much altogether, as one mout say, in the woods. You uns mout skeer him off fo a bit, but he'd be mos nigh shuah to follah."

About the middle of the afternoon we came to a hill that gave us a fine view north and south for many miles, discovering a few frame houses and many cleared fields, but what most attracted our attention were silvery smoke puffs, like baby clouds, away below us, and the quick glint here and there of the sun, which now shone out bright and clear on what were unmistakably rifles or sabers.

We reined in, but we were too far up and away to catch any sound. My field glasses, however, revealed a number of men in gray to the south and others in blue to the north. The firing must have been harmless, for the rear guard of the cavalrymen in blue wheeled now and then to exchange shots with the enemy fully a half mile away. These I now felt certain were the fifty-four men left back with Brown and Arthur, and from the line of their retreat I was sure that the guide, Lin Moore, had reached them and reported my instructions. If we could now communicate with our friends I felt that the immediate danger would be over and that we could reach our lines after having carried out every order and made the scout a success.

As the mountainside was unusually rough and I did not care to kill the horses, which we always did if safety compelled us to proceed on foot, I dismounted one of the men with orders to have our friends halt or return to our assistance if they had passed beyond the line of our advance when the man had reached them. Hugh McNeil's keen eyes took in the situation, and I noticed that his complexion became ashy and his thick lips were compressed with the expression of a man trying to suppress a cry of agony.

As we were out for information and a fight might prove disastrous to our mission we were eager to avoid it unless it became actually necessary to our own preservation. Again we advanced, this time with all speed, though frequently we were forced to dismount, so precipitous was the descent. To our alarm our friends kept falling back steadily, though it was evident there was no panic among them, and as steadily the mounted men in gray followed. At length we could hear the report of the rifles and the yelling of the pursuing cavalry. As it would be courting ruin to go down into the valley, and it was impossible to make headway along the side of the mountain, a halt was called at a point where a mass of rocks afforded a good point for a defense and all dismounted.

Our presence here was soon discovered by the Confederates, and I saw a dozen or more cutting off from the right of their little line and facing the hill at a gallop. Soon they had to dismount and come up afoot, and I was glad to see that their force, weakened by the men left to hold the horses, was not so wildly impetuous as at the start, yet they had pluck, though they showed that they were green and nervous by firing long before there was a chance of their reaching us.

"Lie down and make Hen lie beside you!" I called out to Hugh McNeil, who, with his bound arms resting on a rock in front and his son standing beside him and echoing the cracking of the rifles in a startlingly realistic way, watched the men in gray struggling up the hill.

He hesitated, then suddenly obeyed, pulling his son down by his side. What with watching the enemy and turning my glasses now and then in the direction from which our friends were expected, I lost sight of the prisoner. The scouts, I was glad to see, were as cool as at any time since we crossed the Tennessee, and without any orders they reserved their fire till they could distinguish the men who wore beards among the enemy from those who had mustaches only, then they opened. The Confederates halted, and they threw themselves on the ground so quickly that it was hard to tell the effect of the seven carbines fired from a rest at barely one hundred yards.

By this time I discovered that the enemy in sight were no stronger than ourselves if we could get all together, but instead of following our men in the valley they turned to the mountain and began to hurry up on foot. They had come within about 200 yards when I heard a shout from one of my men, and turning in his direction I saw Hugh McNeil and his son fleeing down the mountain and in the direction of the enemy.

At once and from both sides the firing increased, and I saw the two fugitives falling on their faces, but I was in no mood to think of the reason. I subsequently found that the idiot had freed his father by means of the barlow knife I had given him two days before in exchange for a copy of the Chattanooga Rebel.

Telling the men to keep up their fire I took my papers from my pocket and was in the act of striking a match with the intention of burning them before the enemy could come up, when I heard a cheer down the hill, then my boys leaped to their feet, tossed up their hats and hurrahed till they were red in the face. I sprang up the rocks and saw the Confederates in full retreat and two-score dismounted men in blue in hot pursuit.

I put away the papers and matches, and we went down the hill till halted by Lin Moore, who in his joy embraced me.

He had come to a stop beside Hugh McNeil, who had been shot through the head, but by which side it was impossible to say. Hugh McNeil's Hen was shot through the breast, and the death pallor on his face and the crimson froth about the lips told that the end was near.

The poor fellow recognized Lin Moore and tried to rise. Failing in this, he reached up his hands and, like a distant echo of his former greetings, gave the cry of the whippoorwill, and the guide responded with a "bob white."

"They've done fo' you uns, pore boy! pore Hugh McNeil's Hen!" sobbed Lin Moore, and he knelt and lifting the idiot's head held the canteen to his lips.

Hugh McNeil's Hen, preparatory to drinking, drew his freckled hand across his mouth. It was damp, and looking at it as if to discover the cause, he saw the crimson stain of which he had such an innate horror, then he closed his eyes with a shudder.

Supposing that he was dead, Lin Moore laid him down, but once more the eyes opened and remained open, and there came with his last breath a faint whistle like "bob white."

There was no time to bury the dead and we had no wounded. We hurried to meet Brown and the men who had come to our rescue.

As we rode along I told Lin Moore how Min had befriended us, and that without her assistance our success would have been far from complete.

"I ought to've married fifteen or twenty yeahs agone ef I'd been sot that way," said Lin, "but I wasn't, and I reckon I'd nevah thought of sich a thing ef Min hadn't growed up so kind and purty and so different from most gals I've seed. She's one of them as'll wash without losin color. And now that Hugh McNeil's gone she and me'll hitch the sooner."

In reply to my question as to what the girl would do in the meantime, the guide said that she would be sure to make her way to Jasper, "nigh to which" some of her mother's kin lived.

Just seventeen months after this, when scouting in the same country, I found that Min had done as the guide said. I also found that Lin had married her and that she had a baby. But Mrs. Moore was a widow, her husband having been killed a few months before in the advance of Rosecrans through Wills valley beyond the Tennessee.

THE END.

The Passing of David.

A leader of his party lay waiting in suspense;
There was no lack of "cussing," but woeful lack of sense;
His henchman stood beside him as his chances ebbed away
And bent, with pitying glances, to hear what he might say.
The leader slightly faltered as he took his henchman's hand
And he said: "I never, never shall reach the promised land.
Take this message, I beseech you, to those distant friends so kind—
That Grover's sucked the orange and left me with the rind.

"Tell the Crokers and McLaughlins, as you meet the crowd around,
To talk the matter over on the bosses' stamping ground,
That I fought the battle bravely, and when the day was o'er
The disappointed boomers lay thick upon the floor
And 'mid the dead and wounded were some grown old in sin
And the scars upon their faces showed the fights which they'd been in.
And, though I am a Democrat, my little boom's declined,
When Grover's 'sucked the orange' and left me with the rind.

"Oh, friends, I hope you'll never have this presidential itching.
Although the visions I have had were really quite bewitching.
And, friends, I hope you'll never be in my sad situation,
And try to get as I have done, the party's nomination,
And see, when almost near enough to grasp the glittering jewel,
Another person snatch the prize—I tell you, friends, it's cruel."
At this his trembling voice gave out, and then he made a sign,
Like one who swallows bitter pills or chokes with bit of rind
His chin dropped low upon his breast, as lowed his stricken head,
And then the demagogue of demagogues, poor David Hill, was dead.

—New York Tribune.

A Plain Issue.

With Cleveland as the Democratic leader there can be no mistaking the issue. If he is defeated his defeat will be the death blow of the false cause which he represents. It is desirable, in the interests of all concerned, that the approaching conflict between the two antagonistic ideas of protection and free trade should be decisive.—Boston Journal.

A Transparent Fraud.

What a howl went up from the Democratic press when some of the federal officeholders worked for President Harrison at Minneapolis. Yet at Chicago there were five ex-members of Cleveland's cabinet with their coats off in behalf of the ex-president. What a transparent fraud the Democratic party is anyway.—Columbus (O.) A MOUNTAIN MAID

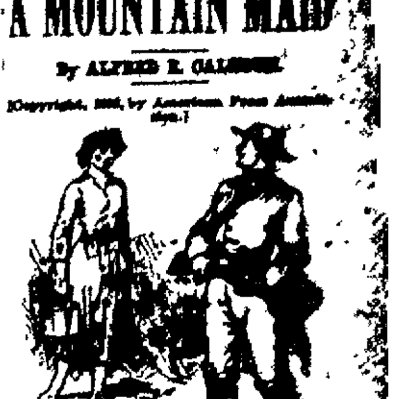
By ALFRED R. CALHOUN.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]



"Hello, sister!" I responded, and lifted my hat.

If Bragg had shown as much energy in the three days following Chickamauga as he did in that sanguinary conflict he could have marched into Chattanooga without serious resistance, but a delay of forty-eight hours gave Thomas an opportunity to fall back with his own veterans and to reorganize the corps of Crittenden and McCook. When Bragg did move he found the Union troops in the works before Chattanooga and guarding it from the west bank of the river, and with characteristic caution he opposed Longstreet's plan for an immediate assault, and at once laid siege to the place.

The story of that same siege of Chattanooga forms one of the most thrilling chapters of the war, and history affords no parallel to its dramatic termination. The Confederates not only held the three railroads that entered Chattanooga, but their cavalry, under Wheeler, poured over the Tennessee and planted themselves in force along the valleys and hills, over and through which ran the MacMinnville wagon road, the only avenue by which the Union troops could hope to get supplies till they were re-enforced.

Never before or afterward did that magnificent Army of the Cumberland exhibit such devotion and endurance as during the siege of Chattanooga for the six weeks following the disaster at Chickamauga. Winter was coming on, but a majority of the men were without overcoats or blankets, many of them were barefooted, and they did not have, when cut off from the outside world, full rations for men and animals for ten days. But true to their splendid record, the brave fellows tightened their belts and stuck it out for weeks on a handful of parched corn a day.

In early October the enemy captured and held MacMinnville for a short time, and destroyed a large train making for Chattanooga. Our cavalry, under McCook, Mitchell and Long, started to clean out Wheeler, and this was eventually done, but not without much hard riding and fierce fighting.

I was scouting in the defiles to the west of Sequatchie valley, in [illegible] county, Tennessee, at this time, my orders being to watch and report the movements of the Confederates under Armstrong, who commanded a division in Wheeler's corps. In appearance and speech the people in this part of Tennessee are exactly like those in the Cumberland range to the north, though the Union feeling was not so strong, more than one-half the men in and about the Sequatchie valley having voluntarily entered the Confederate army.

We were resting and grazing our horses one morning along a little stream running down from the hills to the north, when, in order to get a better view of the surrounding country, I clambered up a mass of rocks that rose for several hundred feet above our temporary camp. I had been here but a few minutes when I heard a metallic click, as if made by a scabbard, and cocking my carbine I turned quickly in the direction of the sound, expecting to see an armed man, whether friend or foe. But to my relief I discovered that the sound was made by a tin pail in the hand of a girl who had come to a halt on an elevation about twenty feet behind me, and but little higher up. The pail was filled with beechnuts, which the girl was munching with astonishing coolness and a display of appetite with which I was in perfect sympathy.

She might have been seventeen years of age, but she had all the grace of movement and the delightful ease of manner that make children so attractive. Her thin dress hung half way between her bare brown feet and her knees. It was fastened at the waist with a cord that brought out the exquisite lines of bust and hips. The hands, like the feet, were shapely and brown, and the face, framed in a tangle of dark, sun tanned hair, was a clear olive, tinted on the cheeks with a warmer shade. The parted lips revealed what is unusual with these mountain women, and that is as perfect a set of pearly teeth as I had ever seen.

With her head thrown slightly back, her left hand resting on her hip, and her right foot advanced with the hand that held the pail, and a chaplet of crimson leaves set tipsily on her head, that girl formed one of the prettiest pictures I had ever seen, and as I looked at her in undisguised admiration she reminded me of the bacchante of whom I had read in my mythological studies.

I must confess that I was more confused than if I had been confronted with a man in gray with a gun, but not by my lady with the sumac chaplet. Her big, brown eyes took me in from my dusty boots to my shockingly bad hat. Then she placed her left hand beside her mouth as if to direct the sound, and called out in a voice that could be heard distinctly down at the camp:

"Hello, mister!"

"Hello, sister!" I responded, and lifted my hat.

"Is you uns down thar Yanks?" she asked, with a wave of the brown arm from myself to the valley.

"Yes, sister," I replied; "we are all Yanks."

"Then you uns hed orter be 'shamed o' yuself!"

"I'm sorry to hear you say that."

"Yes, a heap sight sorry you uns 'peah to be," and the pretty upper lip was curved at the corner, giving another tantalizing glimpse of the pearly teeth. Then, with forcible directness and a heightened glow on the cheeks that told of indignation: "What fo' do you uns all come down heah to fight we uns all? We uns don't want to fight you uns if you uns let we uns alone."

BLAINE COUNSELS HARMONY.

Boston, Friday Evening June 10.

To the Republicans of the Country:

The resolution, energy and [illegible] which marked the proceedings of the convention at Minneapolis will, if turned against the common foe, win the election in November.

All minor differences should be merged in the duty of every Republican to do all in his power to elect the ticket today nominated by the national Republican convention.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

"This tariff plank of the platform adopted at Chicago has made every workshop and factory in the United States a Republican campaign headquarters." So says Senator David B. Hill, a man who generally knows what he is talking about.

On Wednesday President Harrison approved of the joint resolution passed by Congress directing him to proclaim a national holiday commemorating the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, on the 21st day of October, 1892. The country in general will approve of this action. The discovery of the western world was one of the great epochs in the world's history, and certainly the most important since the Christian era.

The Chicago correspondent of the New York Sun, described a street attack by two Chicago men on two Tammanyites who wore the Tammany badge, says: "This is only one of the hundred instances where men wearing the Tammany badges have been compelled to endure abuse and insults from the western men. There is an indescribable hatred of the organization. Of the men sent here those who wear the Tammany badges are the best looking, the best dressed and the best behaved visitors in the city." They have been grossly insulted without resenting it. Men standing in business and society in New York city have been made the butt of coarse vituperation of a mob.

Gen. John Bidwell, the millionaire farmer of Butte county, California, [illegible] twenty years stood at head of the [illegible] in the manufacture of wine [illegible] and after he had accumulated millions of money retired on his ill gotten gains, is now the candidate of the Prohibitionists for President [illegible].

Editor [illegible] of the Jamestown Sun is reported as saying at Chicago: "He (Hill) can carry New York. Cleveland cannot. New York will repudiate Cleveland. Tammany will not support him if he is nominated. What are Democrats thinking of any way? I cannot understand the democrats who urge Cleveland. His nomination means the downfall of democracy. It cannot hold with such mugwumpery injected into it."

The last evidence of the popularity of the President's selection of Hon. John W. Foster of Indiana to be Secretary of State was the unanimous confirmation by the Senate, without the usual form of referring the nomination to a committee, within an hour of the time the nomination was received. This is an honor that is ordinarily reserved for Senators and ex-Senators, but the eminent fitness of Mr Foster for the position was so generally recognized that every Senator was willing to accord it to him.

Senator Quay is authority for the statement that the men who opposed the President in the National convention will all be found taking active parts in working for the election of the ticket, just the same as if they had been [illegible]. That's the sort of talk. [illegible] right to expect [illegible] Republican. [illegible] personal preferences in the party and [illegible] principles [illegible] the United States [illegible] greatest and most prosperous of all countries that all patriotic Republicans place [illegible] and [illegible] principles of the Republican party will live as long as American [illegible] liberty [illegible].

In an article [illegible] from the Pittsburgh Times [illegible] Senator Cameron [illegible] Mr Cameron [illegible] the silver question [illegible]. The Republicans of Pennsylvania are overwhelmingly opposed to free coinage and are just as emphatically in favor of a Federal Elections bill on both of which measures Mr. Cameron voted in direct opposition to the wishes of his constituents.

Since 1860, remarks the Philadelphia Bulletin, the Democrats have had three hurrah campaigns and the Republicans one. In all of those the hurrah candidates were defeated. On the other hand the public desire in 1860 was so strong [illegible] for Seward's nomination that the selection of Lincoln was a wet blanket on the party. This was especially true in 1876 when Hayes was chosen, in 1880 when Garfield was nominated and in 1888, when Harrison made his first national campaign. But those campaigns were remarkable for the steadiness with which favoring currents carried the Republican candidates to victory. In these instances there was never an ebb in the tide which bore them on. After their success had been studied it became apparent that the [illegible] of those who worshipped from a distance and the [illegible] grew from day to day and finally swept everything before them. The danger to parties lies not in the [illegible] which strike bed rock [illegible]. It springs from those who have been [illegible] of enthusiasm and which attain their highest point in the [illegible] of the convention and then [illegible] decline in popular favor.

The [illegible] over the record of Adlai E. Stevenson has resulted in the unearthing of an affidavit made in 1874 when he was a Democratic candidate for Congress. It was charged that Mr. Stevenson was a member of the Sons of Liberty, a copperhead organization similar to the Knights of the Golden Circle, and Mr Stevenson then as now denied that he was ever a member of that organization. William R. [illegible] of McLean County, Ill. then made the affidavit referred to in which he declared that Stevenson was an active member of the Sons of Liberty and also said: "Affiant further avers that on receipt of the news of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln he said Adlai Stevenson stated in substance that it was a good thing and ought to have been done sooner, and that said Adlai E. Stevenson admitted to affiant in conversation with him on subject that he had so stated in regard to the death of Lincoln."

The New York Commercial Advertiser, owned by Cockerill, the former manager of the World, an independent paper with a Democratic tendency, announces that it will support Harrison. It regards Cleveland's nomination in the teeth of a solid delegation from his own state as unprecedented. "These seventy two delegates," it says, "have no confidence in Mr Cleveland's ability to carry the state. They do not approve his use of executive power during his term of office, and their knowledge of the sentiment of the voters of of their party in this state qualifies them to speak with authority when they declare that their sentiments are shared by the rank and file of the democracy of their state." At the same time the Advertiser declares business men are wholly satisfied with the administration, that nothing before the country warrants a radical change, that the people have the power to prevent any disturbance of the present satisfactory state of affairs, and there is not the least doubt they will use it. In conclusion the Advertiser says: "The action of the Chicago convention has rendered the re-election of Mr. Harrison an easy and grateful task."

FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

From our own correspondent.

HARRISBURG, July 4th, 1892. There are many funny things that are now being explained concerning the Democratic convention recently held at Chicago, and nominee, Vice President Stevenson seems to be having all the fun to himself and to indulge in lots of explanation. Stevenson seems bound to keep his record before the people and he has undertaken the job of proving that the public records are perversions of the truth and falsely compiled.

His public record is not one of which he can feel at all proud, or which needs an explanation; it will be taken for truth, unless the efforts, now making, can prove the contrary to what is of public record against him, as a good and loyal citizen as well as a consistent party man.

In my last letter I called attention to his record during the great rebellion and his subsequent career as Cleveland's Post Master General. He has made some attempt at an explanation of these charges, but they have only served to put him more on the defensive and the more he explains the deeper he plunges into the mesh that will eventually swallow him and at the final wind up he will with his unpatriotic party, go to the [illegible] headwaters of "Salt River." "Dear Stevenson don't talk" has been sent out to him and he has been advised to shut up.

His latest explanation is an attempt to cover the series of years when he was a "Greenbacker" and advocated fiat money while he was campaigning in his native State, as the nominee of that ancient "way back" party. In Congress he was known as a fiat money man. He fought the resumption of specie act and did all that he possibly could to have the same repealed at a later session of Congress. He favored the retirement of all National bank notes and the substitution of greenbacks in their place, and he defended his several positions on these questions, both in and out of Congress, and in the face of the record he now attempts to prove that it has been falsified and is garbled. He has already proven himself to be a very heavy burden for Democracy to carry, and the orders, therefore have gone out "Dear Stevenson don't talk."

Grover Cleveland need not talk. His friends are doing all the talking for him. For instance, Burke Cockran, a New York Tammanyite says "Cleveland is popular in Republican States because his Democracy is not offensive to Republicans. I believe he is a man of the most extraordinary popularity on every day of the year except one and that is on election day. It is a popularity which may be described as tumultuous, but it is not calculated to produce votes. It is calculated to produce enthusiasm for four months and sad disappointment for four years after." This comes from Tammany's leader and the Cleveland manipulators say that Tammany will turn in and help to carry New York for the Chicago convention nominee. Yes! they will turn in for the fight, but it will be with unsheathed hatchets and tomahawks keenly whetted, to chop off the votes from Cleveland. And then come and protests from Democrats all over the land because of the free trade planks in the Chicago platform, which would close every industrial establishment in the United States, if perchance democracy should win the election in November next.

The contest this year is not one merely for political place, it is more, it is a fight for principle; on the one hand it means "America for Americans," and protected home rule and home labor; and on the other hand it means "America for the foreign pauper paid laborer's goods of Europe," with all the ills that follow in the wake of the free trade plank. November next must tell the tale; the voters must make the choice and the sequel.

There are thinking democrats, business men who are truthful enough to acknowledge the beneficent results that have followed in the wake of the tariff legislation of the 51st Congress and who will not aid their party in breaking down the protection barriers that keep European goods made by poorly paid and starving free trade foreign laborers from competition with goods made by our own people and in our own country, and these protesting Democrats are daily becoming more numerous and outspoken in their opposition to the creed of their party as adopted, at Chicago, for the present campaign.

There is much significance in Senator Hill's criticism on the nominations of the Chicago convention and the platform upon which they are made to stand. He says, "the free trade" plank used in the construction of the Democratic platform will make every industrial establishment in the United States a Republican headquarters", and it is of course patent to all students of political creeds that in this single instance democracy has placed in the hands of their Republican protectionists a dangerous weapon that will be used with much good effect by the Republicans during the campaign.

The recruiting of Republican clubs all over the country is pushed rapidly forward and thus far in our ranks can be found life-long Democrats who take no stock in the Cleveland free trade ideas and will not follow any of the heresies of the Democratic faith as preached by the "man of destiny" and his followers.

There is general satisfaction with the selection of Mr Campbell, of Illinois, as the Chairman of the Republican National Committee. His ability as a leader is acknowledged. Mr Clarkson, the ex Chairman, say he is for the ticket nominated at the Minneapolis convention and will work for its success and he predicts Harrison's election in November next, yet, he advises against over-confidence. He says there must be some hard work done and if each Republican will only do his whole duty there can be no doubt of the result. Therefore Republicans, "take off your coat and work for victory."

How Cleveland Got There.

Taking the vote by which Mr Cleveland was nominated he had more delegates from Republican States than from Democratic States. The States which gave him the greatest number of delegates in this convention, four years ago gave popular majorities of 478,141 against him. The states which gave him the least number of votes in convention gave him popular majorities amounting to 676,293 four years ago. From reliable Republican states Mr Cleveland had 368 delegates while from reliable Democratic states he had but 229 delegates. The Democrats who are in the minority at home and have no hope of giving Mr Cleveland an electorial vote in November have, therefore, dictated the nomination to the Democrats who are to furnish the majorities and the electoral votes which will be counted for him in November.

Taking the vote by sections the West stands as his greatest supporter for the nomination, but will be against him at the election. The western states gave Mr Cleveland 281 votes in the convention, while the solid South gave him but 163 1-6 and the East but 153 votes. Of these western states that gave Mr Cleveland his greatest support but one (Missouri) gave him its electoral vote four years ago. In his eastern support he was as unfortunate, but one state of that group (Connecticut) having given him its electoral vote in 1888. The states that are reliably Democratic, those in the South, were in the minority in the nomination, giving him but 163 1-6 votes.

Mr Cleveland owes his nomination to the territories which cannot help him in November. Without the nineteen votes from the territories his nomination under the two-thirds rule would not have been possible on the first ballot.

Without them he had but 597 votes. They gave him the victory in convention but they cannot help at the election. —Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE FREE COINAGE BILL.

The Silver bill passed by the United States Senate on Friday is against common honesty and public policy. Every mitigating clause in the original bill was stricken out. It does not stop with requiring the free unlimited coinage of all the silver produced by American mines, at a rate greatly above its actual value. It provides that the silver of all the earth in every shape may be brought here and dumped into our mints at the same fictitious valuation. Whosoever will, if this bill should become a law, may take 68 cts worth of silver to any mint in the United States and get a dollar in exchange for it. In addition all the bullion in the Treasury of the United States against which legal tender notes have already been issued, is to be coined into dollars.

The effect of such financiering would be immediately the wholesale export of gold and the reduction of this country to a silver basis, like Mexico, China and British India. In the adjustment of values to the silver basis, pensions, savings, wages, fixed incomes of all sorts would be shaved to make good the bonus that would go into the pockets of the silver miners and silver speculators. Such an adjustment bad as it would be after it was made would spread untold disaster in the making of it. Thanks to President Harrison and his veto power, the bill will not become a law.

The bill passed by a vote of 17 Democrats and 12 Republicans to 18 Republicans and 7 Democrats against. Of the 12 Republican Senators who voted against the declaration of their party platform upon this question, 11 come to the Senate from far Western States, in the silver producing section. Their constituents are those whom the bill would enrich out of the pockets of their fellow citizens. The twelfth, the only Republican Senator in the list from a State east of the Dakotas, was Senator J. Donald Cameron, of Pennsylvania. In voting in the affirmative he ignored the interests of his constituents and the will of his party, plainly expressed in the platform of the recent Republican State convention. This question was before Congress when Senator Cameron was a candidate for re-election, a year and a half ago, and it is but stating a truth well known to Senator Cameron as well as to those who voted for him to say that if he had frankly and truthfully declared his intention to disregard the expressed will of his constituents on this question, he would not have been given the opportunity to so misrepresent the State of Pennsylvania. —[illegible] Times.

The following incident, says the Tribune, which is vouched for by competent authority, shows with what intense satisfaction the nomination of Mr Cleveland was received by Democratic Senators who had dealings with him during his administration. Several Senators in the Democratic cloak room of the Senate on the morning of Mr Cleveland's selection were discussing the situation, among them Senators Pugh, Kenna, Blackburn and others. The opinion was expressed that in case of Mr Cleveland's election his policy would be materially changed, and that he would be more disposed to confer with the leaders of the party than during his former term. This suggestion seemed to make a pleasant impression upon Senator Pugh and some others who had been specially outspoken in their opposition to Mr Cleveland's renomination. Just at this juncture Mr Blackburn interposed in a way calculated to dissipate all these pleasant anticipations. He said that he took a different view of it and was disposed to think in case of Mr Cleveland's election he would, if possible, trouble the party leaders less for their advice than he did before. Turning upon the Alabama Senator, he said: "Pugh, if Cleveland is elected, which, of course, he will be, it will be found that the humblest exiled peasant in the wilds of Siberia would have far less difficulty in securing an audience with the Czar of all the Russias than you would encounter in obtaining permission to stick your nose inside of the White House."

Reduced to an absurdity the Democratic platform stands for the following leading principles.

1 A tariff for revenue only, adjusted to the needs of the government regardless of the people.

2. Restriction of coinage of silver to a prohibitive basis.

3 Humbug shall be glorified. Long live Humbug!

4 Home rule for the whites of the south, mob rule for the blacks.

5 The Mugwump, are the salt of the earth. The Tammany tiger is not in it, except as a hewer of wood and drawer of water on election day.

It is a great platform for smashing purposes. It was made to be smashed.

One of the most deplorable results of a strike was enacted at Homestead, this State, on Wednesday morning of this week. The owners of the steel mills at that place had refused to accept the scale of wages proposed by the Amalgamated Association, consequently thousands of men refuse to work and are determined that their places shall not be filled by others. Wednesday morning a couple boat loads of Pinkerton men were sent to Homestead on the Monongahela River for the purpose of enforcing the demands of the mill owners in employing new men. The strikers were determined to prevent the Pinkerton men from landing, which was followed by one of the latter firing into the crowd. The strikers fired back when the fusillade became general which resulted in the killing of eight or ten men and the serious wounding of a dozen more. In addition to this not less than thirty five men were slightly wounded. The Pinkerton men were forced to retire, the strikers coming out victorious. It is certainly a grave situation and the outcome will be watched with much solicitude by the American people.

How She Became a Missionary.

"Conducting missionary work much of the time," was the reply of one the most charming women of New York, to a friend, who asked how she busied herself. "I see by your looks you wonder what I mean by that. I'll tell you." A few years ago life was a burden to me. I had been a victim to ills of the most aggravated character for a long time, and the doctors failed to help me. Existence was a long, steady, terrible torture, lingering, living death. One day I saw Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription advertised in the newspaper. Something in the advertisement impressed me favorably. I caught at the glimmer of hope it held out as the drowning man is said to catch at straws. Still, I did not dare to hope. But got the medicine, and behold the result. I feel so well so strong, and O so thankful that I go about telling other women what saved me. In no other way can I so well show my gratitude to God, and to the man who has proved such a benefactor to women, and my love for my suffering sisterhood."

CASH AND ONE PRICE.

BUFFALO, July 6, 1892.

Early Closing.

The store will close at noon every Saturday during July and August. Out of town customers will please bear this fact in mind.

A Question.

What is this to you?

Is it practical and prosaic, just a place to buy things? Is it a cheerful place, full of humanity and human interests, educating, pleasing? If both, and more, then you are comprehending us and we are glad.

If either, then think about the other and see what you are losing. If neither, then think harder—you are losing too much and we are sad.

We are different from the ordinary store. We are big enough to deal in most everything that people need; we go direct to the maker, wherever he is, use experts in every sort of goods, provide the means of doing everything quickly, easily, cheaply, well—we have what you want and sell as you want to buy.

Mid-Summer Sale.

We commence this week a mid-summer sale and it will differ from any other we ever made in this respect—We shall put down the prices each day on some lot of seasonable and much wanted goods.

The determination is to turn the goods, just when they are wanted, into money.

It makes us glad to be able to give you bargains. What care you who loses? You make.

Almost every day of the month will bring forth some new thing. Watch the paper and mail your orders promptly. Shopping by mail is as easy now as shopping in person.

The fame of Dr Pierce's Medical Discovery has gone around the world long ago, and left its record everywhere as a precious boon to every nation. FOURTH OF JULY.

How it Was Celebrated In Smethport—Notes and Incidents of the Day.

Monday was the 116th anniversary of the birth of the Republic and as the weather was on its best behavior, the day was appropriately observed in Smethport.

The day was ushered in by the booming of cannon and the tooting of whistles which however to the disgust of those who preferred to take a morning nap, and at an early hour the people from out of town began to arrive by railroad by private conveyance and on foot, each succeeding hour adding to the number till a very large crowd had assembled.

The committee had offered a prize of five dollars to the farmer bringing in the greatest number of people at one load which proved a good card, the re[illegible] being the centre of attraction between the hours of nine and ten at which place the band concert was given while the loads were arriving.

[illegible]

The fantastic part of the event, a parade was a complete fizzle as it ever has been in Smethport [illegible] the Young Sons of America [illegible] to good advantage. [illegible] a failure. Whatever was lacking in [illegible] large platform in front of the court house being [illegible] until the early morning hours. Altogether the day [illegible] and we believe that all were satisfied.

Notes.

Hon J T Griffith Passes Quietly Away

Of the death of Hon J T Griffith which occurred on Thursday last brief mention of which was then made the Kane Republican says:

In the death of Mr Griffith the town loses one of its bulwarks. He was of that class of men that one only meets once in a lifetime generous to a fault with the welfare of the town and the people always at heart, never attempting to shrink for a moment a call to anything that tended to benefit the public at large.

About two weeks ago he was prostrated with cerebral softening the result of overwork. At times he was rational but only for a brief period when he would sink into that semi conscious state from which he has not aroused for a week. Death came without a struggle and at 11:30 a. m. the mortal spirit of John T Griffith passed into the great hereafter. The sympathy of a host of sorrowing friends not only in Kane but in surrounding towns goes out to the grief-stricken family in this, their hour of distress.

John T Griffith was one of the most representative energetic active and progressive men of Kane. He was born in Ebensburg Pa June 14th 1843 and was a son of Thomas and Mary E Griffith. His early schooling was obtained in his native town. Later he attended Blairsville academy in Indiana county Pa. and finally completed his education at Columbia, Lancaster county. He then qualified himself for his commercial career by attending to his father's affairs. In 1877 he Mr Griffith came to Kane where he has since resided and in 1881 began a general merchandise and lumber trade here which grew into a large and extensive business. In 1884 his brother Webb, became associated with him under the firm name of J. T. & W. Griffith. During the development of the oil territory here they became largely interested in that industry.

"On March 25, 1875 Mr Griffith was married to Martha J daughter of Mr Thomas M Jones of Ebensburg Pa. and the result of the union was five children—three of which Willie, Mary and Annie with the mother survive him.

In 1888 Mr Griffith was first elected by the Republican party to the State legislature, where he served his constituency for two successive terms, acquitting himself with zeal and integrity.

He was a member of the Royal Arch Masons, under whose auspices the funeral was held Saturday.

Tips for the Heated Term

Heat your water before drinking it

Don't overeat. Shut up the house and board

Change your collars every fifteen minutes

Send your wife and her mother to the country

Don't get tight clothes.

If the night is close and hot climb up to the roof but don't yield to the temptation to hang yourself by the clothesline.

Avoid all excitement. If a man tries to talk politics to you knock him down

Avoid over exertion particularly when the boss isn't looking

Don't wear needless clothing simply as a matter of looks. You'll look like a boiled lobster anyhow

Falling off a log

"As easy as falling off a log," is an old saying. When it was first uttered, nobody knows. Nothing is easier unless it is the taking of a dose of Dr Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. These act like magic. No griping or drenching following as is the case with the old fashioned pills. The relief that follows resembles the action of Nature in her happiest moods impulse given to the dormant liver of the most salutary kind, and is speedily manifested by the disappearance of all bilious symptoms. Sick headache, wind on stomach, pain through the right side and shoulder blade, and yellowness of the skin and eyeballs are speedily remedied by the Pellets

Mr Van Felt Editor of the Craig, Mo Meteor went to a drug store at Millsdale Iowa, and asked the physician in attendance to give him a dose of something for cholera morbus and looseness of the bowels. He says "I felt so much better the next morning that I concluded to call on the physician and get him to fix me up a supply of the medicine. I was surprised when he handed me a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He said he prescribed it regularly in his practice and found it the best he could get or prepare. I can testify to its efficiency in my case at all events." For sale by A. B. Armstrong Druggist.

It Should Be in Every House.

J. B. Wilson, 371 Clay St. Sharpsburg, Pa., says he will not do without Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, that it cured his wife who was threatened with pneumonia after an attack of "la grippe," when various other remedies and several physicians had done her no good. Robert Barber, of Cooksport, Pa., claims Dr. King's New Discovery has done him more good than anything he ever used for lung trouble. Nothing like it. Try it. Free trial bottles at Frank E. Foster's Drug Store. Large bottles, 50c. and $1.00.

Pretty strong reasons for trying Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. In the first place, it cures your catarrh—no matter how bad your case, or of how long standing. It doesn't simply palliate—it cures. If you believe it, so much the better. There's nothing more to be said. You get it for 50 cents, from all druggists.

But perhaps you won't believe it. Then there's another reason for trying it. Show that you can't be cured, and you'll get $500. It's a plain business offer. The makers of Dr. Sage's Remedy will pay you that amount if they can't cure you. They know that they can—you think that they can't. If they're wrong, you get the cash. If you're wrong, you're rid of catarrh.

THE MIDNIGHT PLOT

The Democratic Assault on Our Industrial Interests.

The tariff plank in the Chicago platform is a direct assault on all the industrial interests of the republic. It means, if Mr. Cleveland is elected, free trade as soon as he and his followers are strong enough to get at it.

It was fitting that this meditated assassination of the great policy which has made the United States the most prosperous nation in the world should have been planned in the darkness of night, not in the clear sunlight of open day. The plot will fail. The conspirators will be foiled.

Governor McKinley, quoting the great Cardinal Manning the other evening, said, "Free trade creates two things—the world of wealth and the world of want." The intelligent voters of the country will, irrespective of party, cast their ballots next November against the "creation of a world of want" in the United States. "You can always," said Mr. McKinley, "trust the people of the United States to vote for themselves, and remember that the campaign this year, waged under the banner of President Harrison, is a campaign in the United States, for the United States, against all mankind." Mr. Cleveland will wage, as he waged four years ago, a campaign in the interest of the British manufacturer.

The London News, referring to the Minneapolis convention, said: "The candidate selected will stand as the exponent of protection, which blocks the American market against British manufacturers. A Republican victory in the coming election would retard for a long time the progress of the sound commercial doctrines that underlie the commercial greatness of Great Britain and alone maintain British ascendency." Mr. Cleveland is the ideal British candidate, and if his policy can be carried out British ascendency will be the result. A vote for him will be a vote for England.

Americans and Irish Americans, what do you think about it? "Down the Anglo-American Tory candidate." New York Recorder.

Two Records.

It is Harrison against Cleveland. The one is backed by success at the polls, by an administration which even his political opponents have commended and by [illegible] action on the part of a Republican congress. The other has behind him defeat and the work of a congress whose wild acts have led many influential Democratic papers to congratulate the people upon the possession of a wise Republican president who could be trusted to stand resolutely between the country and vicious legislation. Behind him also is a divided party in the pivotal state. Harrison won four years ago. To-day he is stronger than then. His old opponent is weaker. Under these conditions the outcome should not be doubtful.—Troy Times.

The Tail Is Weak.

There is no reason to believe that Mr. Stevenson will strengthen the ticket in the sense of bringing to it electoral votes, as Mr. Gray might have done. Indiana was Democratic in 1884, and in 1888 Harrison's plurality was only 2,348 in a total vote of 551,949. But Illinois gave 25,122 Republican plurality in 1884 and 22,195 in 1888, with a total vote in the latter year of 747,678. The chances that the Democrats might carry Illinois with a popular local candidate are much less than that they might carry Indiana by the aid of a state favorite.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Why Tammany Will Be Interested.

If the intelligent citizen will consider for a moment what the election of Mr. Cleveland would mean for Mr. Hill and for the men who now run Tammany Hall and control the vast patronage of this city, worth to them thousands of dollars where the federal patronage is worth one, he may possibly guess how profoundly they will be interested in his success and how much effort they will put forth in his behalf after they have gone through the form of [illegible] the ticket.—New York Tribune.

All Together, Now.

There are no shrewder politicians than are many of those who opposed Benjamin Harrison's renomination. Therefore, by joining with all other good Republicans and making "a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together" for a great Republican victory, they are going to change individual disappointments into individual and united successes.—Boston Advertiser.

The Tammany Hoodoo.

Tammany Hall is certainly a power in local and state politics, but it seems to be unfortunate at national conventions. It will be remembered that John Kelly fought the nomination of Tilden to the last at St. Louis in 1876. In 1884 Tammany was bitterly opposed to Cleveland, and is fighting him again.—Columbus (O.) State Journal.

The Paramount Issue.

The question in this year's campaign is whether American or foreign manufactures are to be fostered by the American government.—Trenton Gazette.

A WEAK TICKET.

The Democratic Candidates Have a Record of Defeat.

The Democratic party has chosen its ticket and could not possibly have pleased Republicans better than by the nominations it has made. Its candidates smell of defeat. Mr. Cleveland was beaten at the last presidential election. Mr. Stevenson, after two terms in congress, was defeated by the people in 1880, and though he ran as Greenback and Democratic candidate, pandering to the worst financial heresies, was set aside by the voters of his district in at least two successive campaigns as useless lumber. It is a ticket of two back numbers. The ticket might properly be translated, "Yesterday and Day Before Yesterday."

The nomination of Mr. Cleveland has been hopefully anticipated by all his political opponents. Democrats know that Mr. Cleveland is weaker than he was four years ago. He lacks now the enormous power so effectively exerted in his behalf by Secretaries Whitney, Vilas, Fairchild and other cabinet officers, and by the host of federal officials who had been carefully selected during a four years' term for their ability to control votes.—New York Tribune.

Cleveland and the Irish.

"We tender our profound and earnest sympathy to those lovers of freedom who are struggling for home rule and the great cause of local self government in Ireland."—Democratic Platform.

Stick a big pin there!

In 1886 Mr. Cleveland, the nominee of the Chicago convention, was president of the United States. His secretary of state, Mr. Bayard, and his minister to England, Mr. Phelps, agreed upon an extradition treaty with the British government under the terms of which every Irish patriot who had made himself obnoxious to England and had fled to this country would on demand be sent back to England for the dungeon or the scaffold.

That infamous treaty was killed by a Republican senate!

Irish memories are long and Irish revenge is sweet.

The Anglo-Democratic candidate for the presidency named at Chicago will never again be the chief magistrate of this republic.—New York Recorder.

Tammany's Revenge.

New York is the great doubtful state of the east, and Indiana the great doubtful state of the west. Knowing the weakness of Cleveland in New York, the plan of his managers was to take the vice presidential candidate from Indiana. The tactics were good and the purpose was well understood. Indiana dropped Gray as a presidential candidate [illegible] second place. But [illegible] nomination of the disaf[illegible] At this point, the [illegible] and the result is [illegible] upon the weaker [illegible] chief battleground [illegible] candidate at all [illegible] battleground of the west. The vice presidency is placed in Illinois, where it doesn't count.—Philadelphia Press.

Solid South Will Be Broken.

"Cleveland will lose four, if not five, southern states," said Senator Ransom, of North Carolina. "He will also impair our majority in the house, and make it impossible to secure control of the senate. Why will men be so insane in their hero worship? Mr. Cleveland is not as strong as he was in 1888, and it is the supremest nonsense to build our hopes of success on the hazy prospect of Republican defection. Why, every Republican in the land will be shouting for Harrison before November. People should have a little horse sense in politics."—Associated Press Dispatch.

A Tariff Picture.

In thirteen southern states the number of cotton mills in active operation increased from 161

in 1880 to 239

in 1890. Yet the Democratic tariff plank, modeled after the tariff section of the confederate constitution, denounces as illegal the system of protection under which this southern industrial development has occurred.—New York Press.

The Value of Reciprocity.

The immense practical value of reciprocity to all classes, and particularly to the farmers of the United States, becomes more apparent every month as the statistics of foreign commerce show its effects in widening the markets for American products in every country with which treaties of reciprocal trade have been negotiated.—Cleveland Leader.

Doomed to Defeat.

That the Democratic ticket of 1892 is placed before the country for rejection by the people is, in our judgment, as certain as any political event five months distant in the future can be, for reasons that have already been pressed upon the party by its own most sagacious advisers.—New York Commercial Advertiser (Ind. Dem.).

A Conservative Opinion.

Ex-Governor Sherman thinks that the Republicans will carry Iowa in any event by 20,000 this year, and would not be surprised to see it go over 30,000. The ex-governor's hopefulness is shared by all the Republicans in the state.—Iowa State Register.

The Ladies and the Tiger.

Now and for the few weeks following it will be quite safe for even children and ladies to pet the Tammany tiger on the head and stroke its fuzzy fur.—Chicago News-Record.

The Slot Machine.

The convention dropped Cleveland in the slot and will get a kettle of soup in November.—Philadelphia Press.

The old result, too—Grover

Mr. Beecher's Love of Books.

When we had been a few years in Brooklyn Mr. Beecher could in some degree gratify his tastes for works of art, gems, paintings and especially books. He had always earnestly desired to possess a large, well selected library, and now intended, by degrees, to secure it. But temptations in a large bookstore were almost irresistible, and sometimes, before he was aware, he had indulged beyond his intentions, and these mistakes were often the cause of great amusement to us both.

Returning from some unusual "raid," he would come to me with the semblance of great distress, but making a laughable failure of it, and lament over the great temptations that waylaid him in every store. "And where is human nature so weak and helpless as in a bookstore," he would say. "The appetite for drink cannot be half so powerful as the temptations which beset a book lover in a large, richly furnished bookstore."

"Well, how largely have you invested in books to-day?" I asked once.

"Did I say I had bought any? I was speaking of the temptations. But you know how little skill I have in figures. When tempted to buy expensive books I endeavor 'to take account of stock'—isn't that the proper business expression?—and learn just how much I can afford to spend, but you know the bill comes in much ahead of my reckoning. You needn't laugh! Am I to blame because I am not expert in figures?"

Of course I knew there was a box of books on the way. But no one could resist the quaint humor mingled with this pretense of penitence.—Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Policeman as a Consoler.

There was a surprised and very indignant young woman in Fourteenth street, near Union square, a day or two ago. The sky was cloudy and the young woman carried a costly and nicely rolled umbrella. Wholly intent upon some particular mission she hurried along with the umbrella almost trailing at her side. She failed to observe the close proximity of a vicious street gamin until she felt a sudden wrench on the umbrella, and looked down to find that the stick had been broken in the middle, and the grinning perpetrator of the mischief was dancing with delight a few feet away. She related the incident, and showed a bluecoat her broken umbrella. He consoled her in this fashion: "Yes, lady, I know about that trick. Them boys is terrors. They break a dozen umbrellas just like that every day. And they do it out of pure cussedness, lady, for a fact."—New York Times.

A Point for Kite Flyers.

A gentleman living upon the "hill," in a beautiful house having a gabled roof, and finding that the temptation to his children to fly kites from the roof is almost too great to be resisted, has minimized the danger to them in the following manner:

He has had a large platform, probably twenty feet square, constructed on his housetop. This is inclosed in an iron railing, high enough to prevent the little ones from climbing over and yet not too high to interfere with the sport.

On almost every pleasant afternoon during the kite season he is to be found there flying his kite with the others. He seems to enjoy the sport keenly, and at the same time, during his absence, he can rest satisfied in knowing that his children will not fall off the housetop and that he will not pay the penalty of his enthusiasm in having to repair a leaky tin roof.—New York Herald.

Monstrosities in Art.

It is a remarkable example of the accommodating disposition of our sense of beauty that though we are well instructed in the principles of morphology, our eyes are not more offended by some of those false creatures, such as the winged figures of Nike and the angels, and it would perhaps be pedantic and idle to forbid artists these time honored, rather symbolical representations, of which the greatest masters of the best periods have only made a very moderate use. But such indulgence has its limits.—E. Du Bois Reymond in Popular Science Monthly.
